Possible Improvements to Increase Energy Efficiency:

Windows

Windows can account for 33% of the total heat lost and as much as 75% of the heat gain during the summer. Replace single paned windows with double paned, low emissivity coated windows.

Ceiling and Attic

Without a well-insulated attic, much of your heating and cooling costs are wasted. Don't forget the outside walls if your house is older than 1970.

Roofing

Remember, light-colored roofs tend to last longer and are generally more durable than dark-colored roofs, as they reflect more sun. Replace old worn-out roofs and shake roofs.

Water Heater

Next to heating and cooling, water heating is the largest energy user in the home. New gas water heaters use less energy and are very economical.

Furnace and Air-Conditioning

New units extract more of the heat contained as well as reduce the amount of heated air that escapes. Gas air conditioners and evaporated coolers are environmentally friendly and offer lower operating costs. Higher, SEER-related units offer better efficiency and lower operating costs.
